

knowledge that enables us to incorporate effective teaching strategies in multiple contexts. Specifically, Kristen Getchell and I have begun a dialogue journal study where we exchange e-mail letters with one another to discuss our teaching (mostly writing classes) and find ways to bring in new and alternative pedagogies to engage our students in writing courses. This study idea emerged when we sat down to discuss my observation of her teaching of ENGL 101 in fall 2008 semester.

The Teacher-Scholar Model also is important in teaching MA/TESOL students as they struggle to understand what it means to bring theory into practice in different teaching contexts. This will be my first semester teaching graduate TESOL students at IUP. For ENGL 694: Observation in (English Language) Teaching course, I have designed a field component where MA/TESOL students observe different instructors teaching in the English department. The choice of English instructors over ESL instructors stems from the fact that the university has limited resources as pertaining to ESL classrooms and instruction. Although they may not be observing ESL teachers teaching ESL courses, I believe the notion of what it means to be an effective teacher for diverse learners can come from other teaching contexts as well. I am looking forward to working with the MA/TESOL students to help them “see” and “understand” what good teaching is as a way to bridge theory and practice.

In advising dissertation students, my goal is to advise my students to think about and generate their dissertation topics throughout their coursework at IUP. Thus, they will come to theorize the teacher-scholar model in their dissertation topics. I believe that our dissertation work is an extension of who we are as teachers, and the influence that we want to have on our future students. Therefore, I have encouraged all my dissertation students (i.e., as a chair or as reader on a committee) to begin thinking about how their biographies have come to shape the topics that they would like to explore since it is important to look inward as we begin to look at the lives of others in our study.

Finally, as a way to bring theory into practice and uphold the Teacher-Scholar Model, I am organizing the first annual Teacher Scholar Symposium for the IUP English Department Graduate students. This 2009 Teacher Scholar Symposium (Date: September 25, 2009, Friday) is sponsored by the Graduate Studies in Composition and TESOL. The highlights for this event are as follows: (1) Guest speaker and the research workshop facilitator: Dr. Scott Kiesling, Linguistics Department Chair at the University of Pittsburgh; (2) Concurrent Sessions of Student Presentations; and (3) Mentor of the Year Award. For this event, I have formed a planning committee (Dr. Lysa Seloni, Marlen Harrison, Whitney Tudor, Amanda Yannella, Qisi Zhang, Lan Wang, Johnny Hrebik, Daniel Baughman). We began our monthly meetings as of December 2008 to begin preparing for this annual event.

The list below is a compilation of different areas of my Teacher-Scholar Model. I look forward to expanding my Teacher-Scholar Model in the years to come at Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

Teaching

- Taught three sections of ENGL 202: Research Writing
- Designed social action research projects for 202 course students. Fall 2008 semester students have been invited to present their project findings in different venues (i.e., English department student conference, undergraduate research forum, and my Spring 2009 courses)
- Observed/mentored/wrote reports of seven teaching associates' teaching
- Began teaching two sections of ENGL 202: Research Writing (Spring 2009)
- Began teaching ENGL 694: Observation in (English Language) Teaching and coordinated different field placements for the MA/TESOL students matriculated in 694 course
- Will be teaching ENGL 815: Qualitative Research where students will draft their dissertation proposal as a culminating project during summer II session

MA TESOL Program Administration

- Coordinating the TESOL GCoR Program
- Designed and received approval for TESOL Graduate Certificate of Recognition Program for those interested in teaching overseas
- Restructured the TESOL curriculum to meet the needs of incoming students

Action Research: IRB approved and Grants pending (Project Duration: AY2008–10)

- Received IRB approval to study ENGL 202 students' (Fall 2008–Spring 2010) understanding about social justice and diversity issues-collaborative project with Lisya Seloni, Sue Welsh, and Marlen Harrison
- Applied for Faculty Professional Development Council (FPDC) annual grant ($6,500) for the EN202 project along with Lisya Seloni as co-principal investigators
- Applied for the Spencer Grant ($40,000) to supplement the above

Teacher Education Research: IRB approved and Grant secured (Project Duration: AY2008–09)

- Received IRB approval to study undergraduate education majors' life history in becoming teachers-collaborative project with Lincoln University and Gettysburg College
- Completed the interviews for the teacher education project. The interview tapes are being transcribed by a professional transcriptionist and preliminary analysis and manuscript write up will begin in May 2009
- Received a Senate grant ($1,500) for the above teacher education project

MA/TESOL Program Study: IRB approved and Grants being written up (Project Duration: AY2009–12)

- Received IRB approval to study the experiences of our MA/TESOL program students in order to address necessary improvements in curricular issues as well as recruitment and retention issues; the first set of interviews will begin at the end of April 2009 (Nancy Hayward as a co-investigator)
- Crafting multiple grant applications to fund the multi-year MA/TESOL program project. In the grant applications, I will be working with the following co-investigators: Ben Rafoth, Nancy Hayward, Dan Tannacito, and Lisya Seloni. Eventually, all faculty members of the MA/TESOL program and interested faculty members from the C&T program will be part of the grant programs once secured. I believe each one of us will add components to this on-going project in order to ultimately expand and improve the nature of our current program.

Publications and Manuscripts for Conferences

- Received acceptance upon submitting the revisions to a manuscript entitled, Park, G. (in press). "I listened to Korean society.
